Spencer Scene of Spectacular Wreck Sunday

It has often been said that Spencer is a sleepy little hamlet and that nothing ever happens there to create any excitement, but last Sunday the little burg was suddenly on the map and its name appeared in many newspapers as the result of a very spectacular railroad wreck on the Michigan Central railroad now known as the New York Central.

About 10:30 o'clock Sunday morning a west bound freight train drawn by engine No. 2573 stopped in Spencer while the head brakeman Fred Meyer walked up the track to throw the switch for an east bound freight drawn by engine No. 2567 to pass on a passing track, but was astounded when the approaching train failed to slow down and was making approximately 50 miles an hour speed, so he did not get a chance to even reach the switch. He hurried away to safety.

C. M. Robeson, engineer, A. E. Wood, fireman, Al Payne, Conductor and Jack Purdy, third brakeman all on the west bound freight which had stopped, saw that a head-on collision was imminent and hurriedly left their train for spots of safety away from the right of way.

On the east bound freight were Ira Brown engineer, Quincy Cummings, fireman, Joe Sherrick, conductor, Robert Prekrent, head brakeman, Max Augustine, flagman. The engineer, fireman, head brakeman and flagman, leaped from the cab of the engine, and in landing on the ground, Cummings, Prekrent and Augustine suffered injuries. They were removed to Silver Cross hospital in Joliet for medical attention.

The impact of the collision was terrific, the boiler heads of the locomotives were forced together like a stovepipe. Both engines were badly damaged. The force of the collision, forced the standing train back nearly 100 feet. Coal from the tender of the east bound engine was strewn over the top of the cab. The engine was derailed. A number of cars in both trains were crushed and derailed and one car was hurled into an adjoining field. The collision occurred near the Spencer elevator.

Within a very short time, the news of the crash spread, and hundreds of people flocked to Spencer. Late in the afternoon a wrecker from the E. J. & E. railroad in Joliet arrived and righted the wrecked cars. Later another wrecker came from Gary. After the cars had been removed from the rear of both engines, the wreckers pulled the engines apart and got the derailed east-bound engine back on the rails. The single track line was tied-up from 10:30 Sunday morning until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

It is presumed that the accident was caused thru a misunderstanding of train orders.

The crews of both trains were all from Niles, Michigan.

MISS ROSELLA STORMS MARRIES ARMY OFFICER

Miss Rosella Mae Storms, daughter of Mrs. Eugene Kost, Francis Rd. New Lenox, became the bride of Sargeant James W. Boeher, Mather Field, Sacramento, Calif., son of Mr. and Mrs. George Boeher, of Chicago at the 10 o'clock mass last Saturday morning in the Immaculate Conception church, N. Park Ave., Chicago. Father Fleming performed the ceremony.

Charles Cairns, uncle of the bride, gave her in marriage, and Miss Lillian Cairns, cousin of the bride, and George Boeher, brother of the groom, were the attendants.

The bride was attired in a white Vel-rae gown and wore a finger tip veil. She carried an arm bouquet of yellow roses with white streamers. The bridesmaid wore a baby blue vel raе gown with matching halo, from which fell two velvet streamers. Her arm bouquet was of pink tea roses with white streamers.

Mrs. Kost, mother of the bride wore a navy blue crepe street length dress with matching accessories, and wore a corsage of red roses.

Mrs. Boeher, mother of the groom, wore a light blue crepe dress with matching accessories, and her corsage was also red roses.

The wedding was carried off in military style, with the bridegroom in full dress uniform, and his attendant in a white formal suit.

Following the ceremony, the bridal party had their pictures taken and then proceeded to the Vine Gardens where a wedding breakfast was served to the immediate families. During the afternoon hours a reception was held in the home of the bridegroom's parents, for all friends and relatives. A buffet luncheon was served from a large table centered with a wedding cake, that was topped with a miniature bride and soldier.

Six Million Farmers Throughout U. S. Producing World's Largest Food Crop

War Material Vital, but Soldiers and Workers Must Get Nourishing Food

Uncle Sam's farm—the whole United States—will produce this year the biggest food crop in the world's history! Harvesting of this planned production for the war effort has begun and the immensity of it all is an all-time tribute to the American farmer.

Off Uncle Sam's farm assembly line every minute of every day throughout 1942 are coming something like 108,000 quarts of milk,

Take that swift-winged army Aerona plane up there. In its wings, tail and fuselage are 650 square feet of cotton linen.

Yes, Uncle Sam's farmers are turning out war crops this year. Corn and wheat, for example. Most of it goes for feed and food, but some is used in making ethyl alcohol which in turn is employed in making explosives, synthetic rubber and other products.

Peanuts and soybeans are used to make oil which replaces other oils employed in cooking, and releases them for use in nitro-glycerine explosives. Oil from soybeans and flaxseed is used in the paint and varnish covering our ships and planes. Flax is a source of linen for parachute harnesses and rigging. Wool from our sheep makes uni-guns turned out this year will be determined largely by the kind and amount of food our workers eat. The newest type planes need high

Milk and Shipping
In 1942 we are building 8 million tons of shipping—a tremendous amount. But the farmers of Minnesota and Iowa alone will produce more than 8 million tons of milk in 1942.

octane gas no more than our war workers need highly nutritious foods.

Better Food Means More Guns.

Good food, in fact, can be translated more or less directly into guns. For example, the British minister of labor has said to our agricultural American farm goals for 1942, showing increase over 1941 production.

45,000 pounds of potatoes, 73,000 pounds of beef, veal, pork and lard. Think of it! EVERY MINUTE.

If you saw the U. S. navy riding majestically in a sea of milk, chances are you'd call it a nightmare. But could be! Our farmers this year are scheduled to produce 57 billion quarts of milk—more than enough to float not only our navy but every battleship, aircraft carrier, cruiser, destroyer and submarine owned by the United States, Britain, Russia and all the other United Nations combined.

If you are good at mental pictures, maybe you can visualize 50 billion eggs. That's enough eggs to make a line reaching seven times from the earth to the moon.

Or 22 1/2 billion pounds of meat—enough to pave seven four-lane highways an inch thick from New York to San Francisco—seven of them.

Or 91 million acres of corn—an area one-fifth larger than Italy and Sicily combined.

But why all this production of food and fiber? It isn't a part of our victory plan to drown the Nazis in milk or to bombard the Japs with eggs and potatoes.

Farmers Build Planes and Ships.

Well, food and fiber are not merely so many bags of wheat and so many bales of cotton. They are Flying Fortresses and big battleships, like the Washington and the North Carolina; and aircraft carriers, like the Wasp; and General Grant tanks; and workers in the factories and brave men at the front. Those are the crops our farmers are harvesting this year in 3,022 counties of the United States.

forms for soldiers and clothes for civilians. Aviators' jackets, pants, helmets, and boots are lined with shearling sheep skins. In fact, the average soldier uses 100 pounds of wool a year, against an average of 2 1/2 pounds for civilians.

But vital as are these materials for our weapons of war, they are much less important than the food which nourishes our workers and sustains our fighters. Food is one essential without which no man can fight or work.

Bataan Proved It.

Look at Bataan to see how true that is. Look at Bataan to see the importance of food. According to reports, mule meat and rice were all our forces had to eat from early February until the time of ultimate surrender. We just couldn't get through to them with enough pork and beef to do them any good. And what happened? Our last counter-attack failed, not because of bullets or bombs, but because of sheer exhaustion. A shortage of food and sleep had drained out almost the last dregs of vitality. Bataan fell only after its defenders no longer had the physical strength to stand.

That time, food worked for the enemy. Given the shipping, six million American farmers are determined that from now on food shall work for us. They know that today a tractor used in production of food is just as important as a tank on the battlefield. They know that what they do on their farms is important. The number of planes, tanks and officials: "Give us the meat, eggs, and cheese, and we'll increase production 15 to 20 per cent."

Again, an appalling loss of production is suffered annually through sickness of workers. In 1941 more than 20 times as many man-days were lost by sickness as by strikes. The most common sickness is the ordinary cold, and the best preventive for it is a good diet.

So, it's the job of our farmers to keep our men fit—as fit as our machines. It's their job to provide the vitamin A which helps fliers see at night; the vitamin B which helps curb sea-sickness, nervousness and digestive troubles; the vitamin C which wards off scurvy, bad teeth, irritability, listlessness and plagues which in the World War took a bigger toll of lives than bombs, bullets, shells and gas combined.

Yes, vitamins and good food are war weapons. But to get them—and especially to get the right amounts of the right things—is a colossal task.

That is why goals are just as necessary for agriculture as they are for plane or tank manufacturers. We want a specific number of fortresses, or medium bombers, or pursuit ships, or training planes.

Farm Production Is Planned Production.

On April 3, 1941, Secretary of Agriculture Wickard called for a big expansion in the products which the British had just made known they would need under lend-lease: evaporated and dry skim milk, cheese, eggs and pork. And our farmers set out to see that neither our own folks nor the British would run short.

During the summer of 1941—still several months before Pearl Harbor—the department of agriculture went to work on a plan to get war production goals for all farm products. The production goal idea had been used for years by Triple-A on basic crops, but it was a new departure to apply it to all farm products. It meant estimating our own needs, those of our Allies, the allowances necessary for food reserves, and finally the ability of farmers to produce. It meant breaking down the national goals into state, county, and finally into individual farm goals. It meant the contacting of practically every producer by a Triple-A farmer committeeman.

Size of this undertaking is almost beyond comprehension. The six million farm plants in the United States are more than twice as many as all the other business establishments in the country—factories, mines, oil stations, country stores, city retail shops. To get six million farmers co-operating in war production is by far the biggest job of subcontracting of the entire war. But it has been done—and the United States is the only nation that has gone into this war with plenty of food ammunition.

Problem of Women Workers in War Plants ... Idle Plants Rented For Storage by United States Government ...

Bell Syndicate—WNU Features.

WASHINGTON.—Women in industry is a theme worrying many thinkers and planners for that hoped for period "after the war." Women are already playing a much greater part in the war effort than most people realize. In a large plant in Chicago, recently converted from peace to war production, 85 per cent of the employees are women. The head of the corporation operating this plant told the writer that he found women on the average to be more efficient than men! He also said he was using some women on ill presses.

The question which is being raised by the after-the-war planners is how to get the women back in the home when peace comes, especially those who are more efficient than men. The manager of any given plant may be disinclined to replace women with men. The profit motive will be working against that.

While most of the after-the-war planners are worrying about this as an economic question, it is pointed out by a minority that it is really a social, but not an economic question. They reason this way—every woman who is a wage earner will have buying power. Hence she will purchase goods which in turn will provide employment for others.

A 'Social Problem,' Too

The social problem is something else again. Women working in factories are not as likely to be making homes as women working in offices. When it comes to bringing up families the same thing is true, for Washington government work abounds with mothers who are working at their desks again after comparatively short periods of time out when their babies were born.

So far as the war is concerned the use of women in industry is so important that it cannot be exaggerated. Women can be trained very quickly to the types of work, which, it had always been assumed, required years of training.

The truth is that this goes for men too, though women learn comparatively simple mechanical operations demanding constant repetition more easily and more quickly than men. But men have been turned into expert die makers in seven weeks, under the strain of war production, whereas it was considered before the war that it took seven years to make a good die maker.

Government Might Have Had To Erect Own Warehouses

Storage facilities have become one of the bad bottlenecks of the war effort. In the last war lack of proper storage facilities finally resulted in the government having to take over the railroads. What happened then was that every article for the army in France, or for our Allies, had top priority, and consequently flowed along the rail lines to the ports. There the immense amount of goods piled up, choking the piers, the water front warehouses and the railroad sidings near by.

Plans were made long before this country entered the war to avoid a repetition of this. The railroad executives worked out the plans, and these were given the blessing of the government. In fact the government has interfered much less with an intelligent working out of a priority system on the railroads than one would expect any bureaucratic control to do.

But all of this intelligence and planning on the part of the railroads does not obviate the fact that war supplies are being produced more rapidly than they can be delivered on board ship. Hence warehouse facilities are required as they have never been before, not even in the last war.

Recently the government attempted to correct this situation by renting idle plants. The effects seem to have been excellent. In most instances the owners of the idle plants had just about giving up hope of utilizing them for the duration anyhow. So they are pleased to be getting a little rent, to pay taxes.

But the warehouse owners, those regularly in the business and who expect to remain in it after the war, are just as pleased. They knew they would have competition of some sort, because the warehouse space simply had to be provided, as a military necessity.

Had it not been for the utilization of these idle plants, the government might have been forced to build additional warehouses. If this had happened the existing warehouse men would have faced the problem of competition, perhaps from the government, perhaps from competitors to whom the government sold or leased the new warehouses, AFTER the war.

A Bit of Trickery

By

R. HILL WILKINSON
Associated Newspapers—WNU Features.

IN ORDER to gain an end, Preston Mason had resorted to artifice. "Come on out," he urged the beautiful Ina, "for just a minute. I've something to tell you, and it's important, too."

Ina yielded. Once outside, alone, away from the country club ballroom lights, Preston turned to her and smiled.

Ina eyed him coldly. "So! It was a trick! You didn't have anything important to say. I might have known. I might have remembered that you couldn't have anything important to say. You're not bright enough."

She started away, but Preston caught her arm. "Now, Ina, wait a minute. My real purpose was to warn you against David Rollins." "Warn me against him?" Ina stared.

"You've been seeing David a lot lately. Too much. First thing you know he'll simply take it for granted you're interested in him, and then you'll find yourself in a jam. David isn't the man you want to marry, in spite of his money. You're not his type. Besides, you're in love with me."

"Well!" Ina choked, groping for adequate words to express her rage. "Preston Mason, I think you're the most insolent, insulting, conceited person I've ever known. I wouldn't marry you if you were the last person on earth! You—you haven't even a sense of honor or self-respect, else you wouldn't have tricked me into coming out here."

"Preston Mason, I think you're the most insolent, insulting, conceited person I've ever known."

"If you didn't care," said Preston easily, "you wouldn't have let yourself be tricked."

Which remark stung Ina to the quick. She whirled, white with rage, and left him standing there. Inside she saw David Rollins, and she went to him. "Take me home, David. I've—I've a headache."

David was delighted. He got her wraps and helped her into his $8,000 roadster and tucked a robe about her slippery feet, for the night was chilly. His concern regarding her alleged headache was thrilling. So thrilling, in fact, that when they reached the drive at Ina's home she did not at once offer to get out. Instead, in reply to his questions she admitted that her headache had vanished and she felt quite fit.

Whereupon David reached into his pocket and produced a little box. Ina gasped when he opened it at the sight of the diamond that sparkled there.

"Darling," he said, "I know I shouldn't expect you to love me so soon, but tomorrow I'm leaving for Chicago on a two weeks' business trip. I thought if—would you wear it until I got back. Sort of—an approval. It would make me tremendously happy, and you would have two weeks to think things over."

He waited hopefully, his eyes pleading. Ina's thoughts were chaotic. Presently she thought of Preston Mason and the episode on the club veranda. She thought of this and she thought of that. And in the end she held out her hand and David slipped the ring on the proper finger and then kissed her.

Three days after David's departure Ina gave up trying to drive thoughts of Preston from her mind and quite openly began to wonder why he hadn't called. It wasn't like Preston not to call. That was what had always annoyed her about Preston. He had always taken it for granted that she wanted him to call, that she was interested in him, that she even loved him. His attitude went against her grain. If he only weren't so irresponsible, if he possessed a sense of honor or scruples or was willing to admit that her winning required an effort, she might—well, she might even like Preston.

Obviously Preston had changed. She hadn't seen him since that night at the country club and he hadn't called by phone. Not like Preston at all. Almost with a feeling of horror she wondered whether he had ceased being interested in her. She wondered, too, what he would be like, if such were the case. Finally, she decided to find out. It was as good an excuse as any to see him.

The next day she went for a walk, returning on the Bristol road at about the time Preston was due to come along, en route home from his duties in the neighboring town. She heard the familiar chug of his ancient automobile before it reached her, and despite herself her heart began to pound. She knew a feeling of relief when the chugging slowed down and a familiar voice asked her if she wanted to ride.

During the drive back to town Preston talked about the weather and about the country club dance and even touched on the general chaotic condition of the world. When he deposited her at her own doorstep Ina was furious. He hadn't even mentioned her ring, or their quarrel, or the fact that he was contemplating suicide because of her engagement. The insolent thing!

It was four full days before Ina cooled off enough to inveigle another ride from Preston. During that period he hadn't called, and she had been wholly miserable because of his neglect. This time she suppressed her pride by sheer will-power and phoned him.

"Preston," she said, "I have to get over to Oakland tonight and the folks are using our car. Would you drive me over and back?"

"Why," said Preston, politely enthusiastic, "I'd love to."

And in ten minutes he was out front. Midway to Bristol the car of ancient vintage gave a couple of fitful coughs and died. Preston looked concerned and apologetic. Of all times to have this happen! Would there be serious consequences if she didn't reach Oakland within the hour?

Oh, no, Ina told him, it wasn't important. And she blessed the fact that Preston wasn't rich, because if he were rich he could afford a car that wouldn't break down.

There was nothing to do but wait until another car came along by which they could send word to the nearest garage. Ina made herself comfortable. Preston lit a cigarette. There followed a period of silence. Presently Preston sat up right with a start.

"What is it?" asked Ina in faint alarm.

"Heavens!" said Preston. "I just thought of something." Without warning he leaned over and kissed her. "There."

"Preston Mason," began Ina angrily, but Preston interrupted.

"Now don't start lecturing about my sense of honor. I've a clear conscience. It just occurred to me that if you had no moral sense of honor than to go out with me while you're engaged to another man, there's no reason for me to be bothered by scruples either."

"I'm not engaged."

"You're wearing David's ring."

"It's only on approval and—"

and—

"To teach me a lesson," Preston finished.

Ina bit her lip. "Oh, Preston, everything's so confused in my mind. I don't know what to do. I really didn't have to go to Oakland tonight. I—"

"Well, the car isn't really broken down, either. I can start it any time. Shall I?" He turned on the ignition switch.

Ina blinked. "Preston Mason, you just haven't a sense of honor. However, since we're already stopped—"

"I get it," Preston grinned. And he turned off the ignition switch, and put the key into his pocket.

University Initiates

Eye-Conscious Class

STATE COLLEGE, PA.—Prospective Johnny Doughboys with weak eyes won't flunk the army physical examination at the Pennsylvania State college under a new "eye-conscious" program originated by the school of physical education and athletics.

A compulsory vision clinic has been established for freshman hygiene classes in order to make potential draftees more "eye-minded." The clinic will be conducted by H. R. Jones, chairman of the Pittsburgh division, Illuminating Engineering Society of America.

Uncle Sam's future soldiers will be instructed in three phases. The students will be taught by lecture and demonstration concerning the proper care of eyes; preliminary examinations will be made by the student health service and college reading clinic; and students will be guided to the right type of eye specialists for correction. If financial assistance is needed, college authorities will direct them to available loan funds.

"We believe that students must feel responsible for preparing themselves now, not when they get in the army," Dr. Arthur F. Davis, associate professor of physical education in charge of the program, said. "This clinic prepares students mentally and helps them beat the gun."

Dr. Davis said that the college would also teach the future draftee and volunteer about preventive eye-strain. Advice will be given on eye rest, adequate illumination, eye cleanliness, study habits, protection from infectious diseases, fatigue, nutrition, and light evolution. Two surveys will be made. There will be a study of lighting conditions in dormitory and fraternity rooms, and another group will determine laboratory lighting where concentrated work is done.

"If the army and navy want men who can see clearly, students must be taught to prevent instead of waiting to cure eye conditions," Dr. Davis said.

Triple-A Committeemen Enlist Farm Cooperation

Even while Japanese bombs were exploding on Hickam Field and spreading ruin over Hawaii and the Philippines, Triple-A committeemen were covering the country enlisting farmer co-operation—voluntary co-operation.

There were shortages to contend with—shortages of labor, shortages of machinery and equipment, shortages of burlap, baling wire, and dozens of other supplies. The state and county war boards have worked with every available agency to keep shortages from holding production.

Most of the goals were set higher than production had ever been before. Only a few were lower. Wheat, for example, was down 12 per cent from the 1941 level because there was already a two-year supply of wheat on hand. We couldn't afford to use land, labor, and materials for a crop that isn't needed, any more than we can now afford to build pleasure cars and luxury gadgets.

GHOST PLANE

By ARTHUR STRINGER W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: A Lockheed is stolen from Norland Airway. Alan Slade suspects a "scientist" named Frayne, who is supposed to be hunting swans, but who turns out to be after bigger game. He has the plane and is using it to carry pitchblende, a valuable source of power, to the coast for shipment to Germany. A pilot named Slim Tumstead is flying for him. Surprised near their camp, Slade is knocked unconscious by Frayne's assistant, Karnell, and is taken to a deserted island by Tumstead and left there. When he fails to return Lynn Morlock, daughter of the "flying Padre," starts out in her father's plane to find him, while her father and two old prospector friends of Alan named Zeke and Minty attempt to fight it out with Frayne's crowd. Lynn finds Slade, exhausted, ragged and nearly starved, and they return to Frayne's camp to find that Zeke and Minty are in the midst of a fight with Karnell. The Padre is in Slade's plane looking for Lynn. Slade and the prospectors have cornered Karnell and are chasing him into the marshland.

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER XVIII

"Why do you say that's Karnell?" Slade asked as he strode on at Minty's side.

"It's Karnell all right," averred Minty. "Zeke told me that when he sidled back for a handful o' shells."

"Good," said Slade. "I want to meet up with Karnell."

"Make sure it ain't an unexpected meetin'," Minty warned him.

"I've got my eye peeled," said Slade. He stopped short and blinked across the ridge-crests. "What's more, I think that's our friend Zeke crawling along that hogback."

Minty stared in the direction the other pointed.

"That's Zeke all right," he admitted.

"He sees us," cried Minty as he rounded a sheltering rock. "But this is enemy territory, son, and we'd best keep under what cover we can find."

Yet Slade, he soon saw, was making no effort to keep under cover. The tawny-headed bush pilot was advancing down the slope that led to the matted bogland veined with open water. For far out on that soggy tundra, plunging along from tussock to tussock, was a heavy-shouldered man with a rifle in his hands.

"That's Karnell," cried Slade. "Don't let him get away."

Minty promptly dropped on one knee and took a pot shot at the fugitive.

But Karnell ducked in time to hear a bullet whine over his head. Then he clambered up on an island fringed with shrub-willow and faced his pursuers. Both Slade and Minty, when they saw the leveled rifle, flung themselves flat on the wet soil. They lay without moving, until the gunshot echo died away.

Karnell, looking into his rifle chamber, saw that his last shell had been fired. His shout, however, was one of defiance as he turned and leaped from his willow-fringed island to a runway of broken sedge-tufts leading deeper into the muskeg.

He shouted again, hoarsely, as he went panting onward from sedge-tuft to sedge-tuft.

He looked for islets with a showing of clump-willow, for in those root-bound spaces he knew he could always find the promise of support. Across two of these he leaped. Then in his haste he sprang for an island of wire grass.

It was a sizable-looking island and to the eye it had an aspect of solidity. But instead of being an island it was merely a floating raft of tangled vegetation, a tissue of fiber-bound peat that parted and sank under his weight.

It went down slowly. But as it went it left nothing ponderable for the groping long arms to catch at. The churning water rose to the wide shoulders. It rose to the screaming throat. Then it closed over the back-flung head and a few bubbles appeared between the tatters of fiber-bound peat that floated on the water.

Slade, clinging to a willow-clump, saw the stirred-up water grow quiet again.

"Let's get back," he said. "I've still got Tumstead to deal with."

Then he stopped short, arrested by the familiar drone of a distant plane.

He watched the plane as it passed overhead.

"That's the Padre," he said as Minty came up with him.

The old sourdough blinked after the passing wings that dipped and circled for a landing and then were lost to sight.

"I thought mebbe she was that ghost plane there's so much talk about."

Slade's laugh was harsh.

"There'll be less talk about ghost planes," he proclaimed, "when I get my hands on Tumstead."

Slade held out a warning hand as he came to the crest of the ridge. For above the scrub that furred the valley slope before him he detected a wisp of smoke.

"What's worryin' you, son?" demanded Minty as he leaned on his rifle.

Slade, instead of answering, moved forward until he had a better view of the valley bottom. There, in a rock bowl beside a purling stream, he saw a campfire. Squat-

"It's Tumstead. He said he was ready to give up."

ting over it was a ragged figure, holding a skillet with a stick tied to its handle.

"Why, it's Zeke," gasped Minty. Zeke, startled by their advance, scrambled for his rifle. But the poised barrel slowly lowered as he identified the intruders.

Slade felt a wave of weakness go through his body. He realized, as he subsided beside the fire where the tea pail bubbled, that he was very tired.

"Why, Lindy, you look all in," cried Zeke, conscious of that sudden slump.

Slade stiffened his shoulders. But it took an effort.

"I'm all right," he protested. "Where's Frayne?"

"We'll go into that," said Zeke, "after I've bucked you up with a swallow o' hot tea and some sowl-belly."

"Where's Frayne?" repeated Slade.

Zeke, busy over his fire, caught the determination in the other's query.

"That's what I'd give an arm to know," he admitted. "There ain't been a pop out o' him for two hours now. But how about that orangutan mate o' his?"

Zeke showed no emotion when told of Karnell's end. He merely directed a reproving eye at his shack partner. You should've got that buzzard on the wing."

Slade found his boiled tea strong and bitter. But it washed away his weariness.

"How about the other man, Tumstead?"

Zeke blinked about at the encircling spruce ridges.

"That bird seems to be hidin' out on us, same as his boss."

Slade was on his feet again.

"I've got to save that Lockheed," he said as he reached for Minty's rifle.

"What's a Lockheed?" queried Zeke.

"Our stolen plane. The plane they've been ferrying that pitchblende out with."

Zeke reached for the battered tea pail and drank from it. Then he wiped his mouth and essayed a head-jerk toward the west.

"She's there," he announced. "And she'll stay there."

"What does that mean?" questioned the startled Slade.

"It means I snaked through the scrub and climbed aboard her. And bein' there, jus' to make sure o' things, I twisted her fuel-line out."

"You what?" barked Slade.

"I jus' anchored her where she lay," answered Zeke, "by tearin' out her feed-pipe. I emptied her tank, son. And I ain't got that smell o' gasoline out of my pants yet."

"And you didn't see Frayne?"

"Not hide nor hair o' him."

Slade stood thoughtful a moment.

"Then what's he up to? He can't get out of this territory without a plane. Yet he can't use that Lockheed. And he can't skulk back in these hills for long. We've got to know where he is."

It was Zeke who spoke next.

"That's what your flyin' Padre says. He and his girl's busy on their two-way radio over there at the lakeside, tryin' to call Edmon-ton and Churchill and Mountie headquarters at Coppermine. Said he reckoned it was about time for the air patrol to edge in on this."

"We can't wait for that," announced Slade. "And if I know Frayne he won't wait for it."

A happy thought lightened Minty's seamed old face.

"How're you t' know he ain't lyin' out there with a bullet hole through his head? He was sniped at considerable, by Zeke and me, even if our eyes ain't what they used to be."

"That would still leave Tumstead," said Slade. "I'm going to get my plane and scout over these ridges."

Zeke proceeded to mix a fresh portion of flapjack batter.

"Well, I hope you round 'em up pronto," he announced. "For grub's gittin' low with us two, Lindy, and I've a hankerin' to amble back to that Kasakana shack of ours and know a considerable spell o' peace and quietness."

Slade made no response to that. He merely swung Minty's rifle over his shoulder and started up the slope that stretched between him and the lake where his plane rested. His glance at the sun told him the long northern afternoon would soon be merging into its equally long evening. And there were things to be done before the brief hours of sub-arctic darkness set in.

It was on the crest of the second ridge that he caught sight of Lynn. She hesitated, apparently bewildered as to what course to take. But, once she heard Slade's shout, she quickened her steps and came panting up the slope.

"What is it?" he asked, arrested by the alarm on her face.

"It's Tumstead," she said. "He came to Father, just now, with a white rag on the end of a stick. He said he was ready to give up. Frayne, he claimed, was lying wounded over the hill and had to have help."

Slade's face darkened.

"Did your father believe that liar?"

"He said he had to," was Lynn's panted reply. "He's gone out to Frayne. He said he couldn't let a man die without help."

"I don't like the look of this," said Slade. "Where is Tumstead now?"

"He pretended to go back with Father. But something tells me he didn't."

"Where's your plane?" Slade promptly questioned.

"At the lakeside there," said Lynn, leading him to slightly higher ground and pointing to the expanse of blue water that could be seen through the spruce tops. "We'd been working on our radio. Father'd been having trouble in sending and found a transmitter fuse had crystallized and had to be replaced. I was back in the cabin, testing out the set, when Tumstead came down the bank and talked to Father."

Slade peered through the trees, to a lower arm of the lake. The tension went from his face when he saw the Snow-Ball Baby still moored there.

"Let's go," he proclaimed.

"Go where?" asked Lynn.

"Back to your ship," answered Slade, "or to mine. I've got some quick scouting to do around this neighborhood."

"Alan, you can't fly," she told him. "You mustn't."

Slade, looking down at her, smiled at the determination in her face.

"I've got to fly," he announced. "That's my business."

He was moving on along the ridge crest toward the lake, disregarding the restraining hand she linked in his arm.

"But you're as foolish as Father," she maintained. "You're in no condition to fly. You're tired and worn out. You've got to have proper food and sleep before you're fit for taking chances like this."

The tremor in her voice brought him to a stop. He stood looking down at her again, but this time he looked down at her as though he were seeing her after long absence. Through his dull fog of fatigue and anxiety the loveliness of her face came slowly home to him.

"I'm used to taking chances," he said, with a little of the earlier ring of iron gone from his voice.

"Then I'll take them with you," she announced. "If you go up, I go too."

His thin face softened with a smile.

"Am I worth it?" he asked, conscious of how little room for kindness life had been leaving them.

"You are to me," she said with the forlorn and final candor that walks hand in hand with desperation. She even moved a little closer to him. "I love you."

He forgot hunger and weariness as he took her in his arms and held her close.

"I have to be worth it," he told her as he smoothed back her hair. Then his laugh was brief and bitter. "They haven't left us much room for this sort of thing, have they?"

"We must make room," she protested, clinging to him. But as he lifted his head she could see the hardening light in the Viking blue eyes.

"Let's go," he said for the second time.

ISAAC PRACTICES PEACE

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 26:13-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.—Matthew 5:9.

To talk peace in a warring world seems almost futile, and so it is, unless it be the peace of God. In a world largely dominated by the philosophy that might makes right, and in which men demand what they call their rights, taking them even by lawless and violent methods, it is increasingly difficult to proclaim the truth that patience and meekness are not weakness, but are Christian virtues worth emulating.

The story of Isaac is interesting from beginning to end. He was an ordinary man, one of the common people. He had come through varied experiences of victory and defeat before the time of our lesson. Fearing a famine, and apparently not trusting God at the moment, he had gone down from the promised land to the country of the Philistines, there redigging the wells which his father Abraham had dug. The result was that he prospered. Ere long, however, envy on the part of his enemies taught Isaac that—

I. Peace in This World Is Temporary (vv. 13-21).

Isaac had prospered, but he was still out of the promised land, and while he was in the land of Philistines he could expect no permanent peace.

We are in the world. We long for peace, and would throw all our influence and service into the cause of bringing a righteous peace to the troubled peoples of the world. But let us not be misled by that desire into the support of unscriptural and impossible peace programs. This world is a sinful world, and as long as that is true, there will be strife and war, that men (as James puts it) may have the gains thereof for their own pleasure.

Our business in such a world is to preach the gospel of grace, winning men to Christ, that they may become men of good-will. Isaac was such a man, willing to yield even what seemed to be his right, rather than cause contention.

Undoubtedly there are times when one must defend his name and his possessions, but all too often those who do "stand for their rights" have wrecked homes, churches, and nations, and have gained nothing but an empty victory.

The peace of this world is temporary. Is there then no real abiding peace and joy?

II. Abiding Joy Is Found in Fellowship With God (vv. 22-25).

When Isaac came up into Canaan, the land which God had promised to him, he found real peace and an abiding joy in renewed fellowship with God. Even so, the Christian man and woman who will step out of a spiritually destructive fellowship with the ungodly world and come over wholeheartedly into the spiritual Canaan of full consecration and separated living, will find true peace and satisfying communion with God.

Our thought, however, has wider application—one much needed today. There is to come a time when this world will have true and abiding peace which shall cover the earth like the waters cover the sea. When the One who has the right to reign, the Lord Jesus Christ, returns to take His throne, then, and not before, will there be true peace.

We await that day with longing which grows more intense as men grow more violent in their hatred. But is there nothing more we can do? Yes, we learn from Isaac's experience that—

III. A Godly Life Is a Testimony to Warring Men (vv. 26-31).

These men were wicked men, even speaking falsehood in their claim of friendship toward Isaac (v. 29). Now that they perceived that God was continually blessing Isaac in spite of their repeated injustice toward him, they decided that it would be well to make a covenant of friendship with him. Even those who follow the way of war and aggression cannot deny the effectiveness of true Christian testimony.

Observe also that by his patience and kindness Isaac ultimately made friends out of his enemies. "It is better to turn enemies into friends than to beat them, and have them enemies still." And so this man with the patient, self-sacrificing spirit brought peace not only to himself, but to those about him, because he believed and trusted God.

"When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him" (Prov. 16:7).

What can we do to bring peace today? We can pray that God will help America and her allied nations to turn to Him in repentance of sin, and in a desire to so honor His name that He may be able to give His blessing. When Hezekiah spread before the Lord the threat of his enemy, God undertook for him in a night's way, because his heart was right toward God (Isa. 37:14-20).

Will he do less for us?

BLUE MORNING GLORIES IN APPLIQUE DESIGN FOR CURTAINS AND TOWELS

WHATEVER the limitations that priorities may place on new bathroom fixtures there is no limit to the gay color and good cheer that you may have with brightly painted cupboards and towels decorated with pieces from your scrap bag. In this bathroom a morning glory applique design is used for towels of two sizes and for curtains.

The handy towel and lotion cupboard is painted white outside and morning glory blue inside. The sides, top and bottom are screwed together at the corners. Use half-inch metal angles as shelf supports, or make grooves for a neater job. As shown in the sketch,

Salt fish are quickest and best freshened by soaking in sour milk.

Onion juice should be added after a mixture is cooked rather than cooked with the mixture if the best flavor is desired.

Each time bed sheets are changed the mattress should be turned end-for-end or upside down.

Rancidity in lard can be prevented by keeping it away from air, light and warmth. Store in tin or crockery containers in a cool place.

Sheets and other linens should be ironed in different folds each week so the creases will not break through.

That fish may be scaled much easier by first dipping them into boiling water for a minute.

To keep bread in the best condition, store it when cool in a clean, well-aired, covered, ventilated container and keep in a cool, dry place.

To protect garden shoes keep them well greased or oiled with neat's-foot oil or cod or castor oil, tallow or wool grease. Let dry in a warm place.

Sweet corn, green string beans, green peas, pumpkins, squash, celery and greens are best vegetables for home drying. Apples and berries are adapted to drying in the home among fruits.

July 22, Barracks

Dear Lulu:
Just received your letter and believe me, it was well received. It's sure great to hear from folks at home. I don't believe I'll be here very long, as I qualified for Aircraft Mechanics school, and it does not take very long for them to ship you off. Believe me, it's really swell the way you folks take care of the fellows in service. I'm sure that the other fellows feel as I.

I have not received a copy of the Tinley Times yet, but I suppose it won't be long until I do. The Army sure does agree with me, I never felt healthier in my life.

I'm afraid I just ran out of words at present, so there's nothing for me to do but wish you a lot of luck on the carnival and other occasions.

Sincerely yours,
Hally Hollwedel

Citizens Committee

Dear Friends:
I was glad to receive the Times, also your letter. So far the Army is fine and although I don't always agree with the menu, it isn't bad.

We have all the different denominations of churches here. Last Sunday I went to the Catholic church. There isn't much to say at the moment except "than you" and I really mean it. The hottest day so far has been 122 degrees in the shade and everybody stood up under it except a few with weak hearts. I have 6 weeks more of Basic training and then I get a crack at officers training in Georgia. Hoping to see you all in September.

I remain,
Freddy Willman

July 21, 1942

Mrs. Lulu F. Rogers, Citizens Service Committee, Tinley Park, Illinois

My Dear Mrs. Rogers:

Your work with the service committee of Tinley Park receives my utmost regards.

The Tinley Service Committee work's have done, and will continue to do work more socially important than any Club I have ever seen or heard of in Tinley. We fellows appreciate everything the Club is doing for us and we want you folks back home to know we will not let you down in our service for our country.

My experience here at Camp Crowder is paved with adventure. My mother and sister Mary visited me here at Camp last Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Boy it was swell to see them. We had a swell time.

At this date, July 21 it will be twenty days that I have been in the Army. I started to count the days, of actual Army life, and not from the day I enlisted. Camp Crowder is a huge camp located on the southern tip of Missouri bordering Kansas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Camp Crowder contains 65,000 acres of land covering over a hundred sq. mile area.

I have been assigned to be a telephone battery operator. After 3 months training at Camp Crowder we are then assigned to a future combat unit which in a year or so will probably see actual combat duty.

I've signal corps, soldier, along with the Red Cross, Field Artillery. The Signal Corps train young men the art of radio repair and code message, telegraphy, telephone, electricity etc. It can not afford men who blunder. This job is the back bone of a true army. Without the signal Corps the war on the battle field would be useless. The signal corps, soldier must be trained not only in technical work, but also the modern arts of war. The past two weeks we have been taught many details of Army training. I have just concluded a twenty hour rifle drill before going to the range for our firing test. The guns we use can kill seven men standing behind each other. Bones or no bones. We also went through a gas chamber test last week. We received eleven hour gas drill before the tear gas chamber test.

We were sent into the gas filled chamber without our mask on. After crossing the room holding our breath and closing our eyes slightly as not to take in too much gas in the eyes, we ripped open our mask carrier, took out our mask in split second timing and proceeded to adjust our mask in short order time. The room was filled with tear gas. So well were we trained in gas attack very few soldiers got much gas in the eyes and lungs. Time limits my discussion of various gases and their effects. I will mention this in a future letter.

This gas defense protection is very important as well as interesting. In our training course we are going from 5:30 in the morning until 6:30 at night. It is needless to say how tired we are at the end of the day. We walk mile after mile every day in the hot Missouri sun. We train in the hot sun, and rain or shine. The Army knows no excuse for letting up training. The obstacle test in the Army of which I partook in this week is a real battle fired test, everything a soldier encounters in the battle field was stationed for our test. We had to hurdle high barriers including a high wall with a short rope hanging down to grab pull up and scale the wall.

We ran thru barbed wire fence, hurled sand bags, crossed short areas of water puddles, etc. You ask me how the USO treats and operates in the Army. The USO is an organization that in my opinion is not appreciated by many folks. They look upon it with suspicion that it is all politics etc. I mean people, or I should say some people believe the soldiers do not receive the full benefits of all the money, that go into the organization. The USO is a priceless organization. I asked the Folks back home to give to the USO and the Service committee all the loose change they can afford. The money is put in to good use. This army is the best fed, the best entertained, trained and clothed army in the world. By now, May God be with the righteous, and we know and God knows, who the righteous are.

Eddie Nugent, Camp Crowder, Mo.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Spirit" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, Aug. 9.
The Golden Text was, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" (II Cor. 3:17).
Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (I Cor. 2:9, 10).
The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Symbols and elements of discord and decay are not products of the infinite, perfect and eternal All. From Love and from the light and harmony which are the abode of Spirit, only reflections of good can come. All things beautiful and harmless are ideas of Mind" (p. 280).

War Production and Electric Power in Northern Illinois

War production means more than making guns and tanks and planes. In wartime particularly there must be an abundance of wholesome food to enable fighting men and civilians to meet the extraordinary demands on their energies.

In northern Illinois more than 35,000 farms, served by these companies, are now engaged in producing energy-giving food. Efficient production on these farms is made possible by a steady flow of electric power . . . power to perform countless farm tasks that help supply the huge quantities of food demanded by America at war.

The electric milker brings a high degree of efficiency to the dairy farm . . . cutting milking time in half.

The modern farm chores are done largely with electricity, saving many precious man-hours of labor these days.

Pigs get off to a good start, thanks to an electric pig-brooder that keeps them warm during their first weeks.

Huge steel towers carry energy from generating stations to the vast network of power lines that spreads out over the countryside, making electricity available to remote areas. Power is delivered direct to the farmer . . . another practical tool to help in meeting farm quotas.

Production speeds up on farms. An electric motor hoists hay into the barn for storage.

Feed is ground electrically with portable farm motor—for convenience and economy.

Official U. S. Treasury War Bond Quotas for August

Washington, D. C., August 5.—While maintaining a tentative annual level of twelve billion dollars as its goal, the Treasury Department today fixed the August quota for the sale of War Bonds at $815,000,000 as shown by the accompanying map by states. In lowering the quota from a billion dollars in July to $815,000,000 in August, the Treasury has given recognition to certain factors which may be expected to result in variations in sales over the 12-month period, such as the seasonal character of farm income.

These factors have been taken into account in determining each state's share for the national quota for August and will be given consideration in fixing quotas for subsequent months.

In addition to the state quotas as set out in the map there is a federal payroll allotment quota of $9,750,000 and territorial quotas as follows: Alaska, $760,000; Canal Zone, $213,000; Hawaii, $4,800,000; Puerto Rico, $440,000, and the Virgin Islands, $17,000.

PRIVATE PURKEY IN LOVE AND WAR

(Harriet Joins Up With the WAACS)

Dear Oscar—
Don't look now, but I'm in the WAAC. If you're in an army why not me? I got to thinking of you doing your bit as a soldier and I thought I would feel better about it if I was following your example. Well, anyhow, here I am out in Des Moines and already I appreciate all those complaints you used to make about your feet. Right now the girls have made the army reverse the usual routine and give us a light noon meal and the heavy one at night. At noon we just get salads and drug store quickies but I wasn't here three days before I saw it was all a mistake as the work gives me an appetite like a horse. And I don't mean an ordinary horse.

Mess Sergeant Harry Decker says we will all be shouting for big meals at noon in no time and I admit he is right. I guess the girls all figured that they must take care of their figures but this was so much wasted worry. This army routine will take care of their shapes.

The army has figured it out that a girl soldier needs 2,700 calories a day to a man's 4,000. But it must have reached that conclusion after watching you eat. It will take 4,000 a day to keep me at normal weight. For years I have been nipping at lettuce leaves to keep my weight down but in the WAAC I can see my worries are over. They can pass me mashed potatoes from now on.

A man is boss of us. He is Colonel Faith, which is a pretty name for a colonel and he will have to live up to it if he is to get any results from this army. He is reputed to be a strict disciplinarian but the news should never have leaked out. You know how a woman reacts when she hears that any man who is to tell her what to do is a disciplinarian. He has two strikes on him from the start.

Quite a few army men are out here in general charge. They try to be stern but they look pretty uncomfortable. I can tell they would rather be anywhere but here. Susie Graham says they must have been detailed here as punishment for some army crime. The first big laugh came when army men showed us how to make beds and insisted that we make them their way and no back talk. They made them pretty good at that but we made 'em all over again as soon as they finished. We have steel lockers at the foot of our beds and you are my hang-up boy, of course, dear Oscar. One of the girls asked me if it was a snapshot of Abbott or Costello. It was just because the picture was taken in too bright a light.

Well, dear, I hope all is well with you. How I wish we were in the same army! Your Yankee Doodle girl never stops thinking of her Yankee Doodle boy. I love you.

Harriet.
I just heard some funny noises.

VOICE FROM THE END OF THE LINE

"The WPB has restricted the purchase of nail polish, mascara, perfume, rouge, powder, lipstick and facial creams."—News item.

Lips that look a little human,
Cheeks that are authentic, too,
Help some Yankee bomber's crewmen
Blast a Jap out of the blue.

Noses that are sometimes shiny—
Faces that are real McCoy—
Aid in trimming Moe and Heinie
And that Hirohito boy.

Hands that are as God intended—
Nails as nature made all ten—
Help to keep explosives blended
As a help to fighting men.

Gals with all mascara missing,
And with faces as designed,

As his legions fall behind.

Just a little touch of powder,
Not so many facial creams,
Tend to make a hopeless chowder
Of the Axis hopes and dreams.

*Recipes Given

Prepare butterscotch pudding as directed on package. Cool. Fold in whipped cream. Line bottom and sides of mold or loaf pan with waxed paper. Arrange layer of lady fingers on bottom and sides of mold. Turn ½ of pudding into mold; cover with layer of lady fingers. Turn remaining pudding into mold and place another layer of lady fingers on top. Chill 12 to 24 hours in refrigerator. Unmold.

Bermuda Appetizers.

Chop Bermuda onion finely, marinate and drain. Spread on crisp crackers and cover with slice of Liederkranz cheese. Thin slices of rye, pumpernickel or whole wheat bread which have been buttered may be used instead.

You can do all sorts of things with cheese as a last course and serve it in place of fruit. Camembert has an affinity for fruit. Try it with crackers served with a bowl full of summer's luscious fruits or, try American-made equivalents of Roquefort and Blue cheese spread on hot buttered Boston brown bread tossed with after dinner coffee in place of dessert. Serve a cheese tray for refreshments and spare the sugar ration. This spicy apple sauce cake requires only ½ cup of sugar.

*Apple Sauce Cake.

½ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
2 eggs
½ cup molasses
2 cups cake flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon soda
1 cup apple sauce
½ cup raisins

Cream shortening; add sugar slowly, beating in well. Add well-beaten eggs and beat until well blended; add molasses. Sift together dry ingredients and add alternately with apple sauce to first mixture. Add raisins. Bake in greased square baking pan in moderate oven at 350 degrees about 1 hour. Frost with:

Raisin Nut Frosting.

1 egg white
½ cup light corn syrup
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
½ cup chopped seeded raisins
½ cup chopped pecan meats

Beat egg white until stiff. Add syrup slowly, beating constantly. Add vanilla and half of raisins and nuts. Spread between layers and on top of cake. Sprinkle with remaining raisins and nuts.

*Lemon Smothered Chops.

(Serves 6 to 8)

2 pounds pork or lamb chops, cut thick
Put in a large covered skillet or chicken fryer. Cover top of meat closely with:
2 unpeeled lemons, sliced
1 large sweet onion, cut in rings
1 green pepper, cut in rings
1 teaspoon salt
Pour over all:
2 cups tomato juice

Dot with flakes of fat cut from meat or butter. Cover and cook on top of stove 1½ hours or until done. Lift onto a hot platter, being careful to keep lemon, onion and pepper slices in place. The meat cooked this way acquires a chicken texture and color, while the lemon, onion, pepper and tomato make a delicious sauce accompaniment.

"Mary, were you listening?" she asked the girl.

"No, ma'am."
"Mary, don't deny it—your hair is still standing on end."

From an old French word "mes" derived from the Latin word "missus" meaning a course at a meal, comes the Army's name "mess" for its breakfast, dinner, and supper. Favorite meal with the soldier is chicken dinner—his favorite cigarette, Camel. (Based on actual sales records from Post Exchanges.) A carton of Camels, by the way, is the gift he prefers first of all from the folks back home. He's said so. Local tobacco dealers are featuring Camel cartons to send anywhere to men in the armed forces.—Adv.

Lynn Says:

Household Tips: Are you wondering how those pots and pans are going to last for the duration? Since the production for these has been sharply curtailed, you will want hints on keeping them in "cooking" condition:
Aluminum: Leaving food in aluminum longer than necessary, soaking the utensil before washing and alkalies such as soda spell short wear for this metal. If you want to clean aluminum without endangering its wearing period, use very fine scouring powder or steel wool for discolorations. Or, cooking acid foods like tomatoes, rhubarb and apples will do the trick.
Iron: Wash in hot, sudsy water. If this doesn't clean it, use hot soda and water. If rusted, use scouring powder or steel wool. Always dry completely and wrap in paper for storage.
Tin: This metal does not keep shiny indefinitely. Remove burnt foods by boiling in soda and water for five minutes, never longer. Rinse and dry thoroughly.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages are sometimes further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.
